Systemic Research: Making it count in the face of cuts

CONFERENCE
PROGRAMME

Friday 3 February
2012

Fee: £95 (£76 per person for groups
of 3 or more)

This exciting and timely inaugural Family Therapy and Systemic Research Centre conference will bring together internationally recognised researchers in the systemic field, who will present on the importance of quantitative and qualitative research evidence for family therapy at this time of financial austerity.

The conference will give clinicians and researchers an update on current research methods and findings, as well as opportunities to consider types of research for their own work and organisations.

A mixture of presentations and workshops will look at the following:

- how we make the case for family therapy using research evidence
- different research methodologies
- how we can turn clinical practice into research
- the benefits of manualisation for clinicians
- what we can learn from a dialogue with family life research
